

B2

It was one of those days when I just wanted to disappear because I heard that my favourite singer is coming to my country and guess what? Tickets were already sold out.

I've been crying for hours according to the fact that I lost the opportunity to meet my idol. I was trying to stop my tears but it wasn't working.

Suddenly, the phone started ringing and I jumped. "Hello!", I said.

"Congratulations! You won the tickets for the Justin Timberlake's concert!", the person on the other side shouted.

Confused and extremely happy, I was scared to ask how. Then the man who called said:

"Oops, I'm really sorry, but.." My heart started jumping. "Ugh, you know what? Two tickets are going to be delivered to your address in two hours."

I was shocked and happy and excited at the same time.

Later, the man who gave me the tickets explained that they weren't meant for me, but he had dialed the wrong number and wanted to give them to me because it just felt right.

It was such an interesting and life changing experience and I'm always going to be grateful for it.

Miona Lalić, PENGUIN ENGLISH, Jagodina