

B2

It was only a small mistake but it changed my life.

I was at the village of Kremka mountain Tara where my grand parents live. It was snowing and I couldn't see a hand in front of my eyes.

I regretted that I even came at this stupid village. I had enough of everything: stupid snow, stupid farm chores, same food for two days and the worst of all irritating cow smell.

My grand parents house is very small, it has only four rooms, there is no cabinet, so I was getting bored.

But, let's put this story in a nutshell. My mistake was that I had got in the huge fight with my mum. I don't remember what was the reason, but I know for sure that I was cranky all day. I told her some very mean things. She started crying and my heart just broke. I was shocked and I was in tears in a second.

I told her that I didn't mean to say that. I was only bored (I know stupid excuse).

A few moments later she took me to my grand parents' room, and showed me a big photo album with pictures of her, my uncle, aunt and all my cousins when they were kids. She told me that she used to walk for three hours to get to school.

She also told me that my uncle used to hide money under the rocks, and all adventures that they had in a forest when they were little.

That was when I realised that I'm so grateful for life I have, but I was also sad because I will probably never experience any fun adventure because we live in an era of internet and everyone is addicted to it. Don't feel bad if you sometimes make a mistake, because it will might make you a better person.

Sara Tomović, HELLO, Belgrade