Discrimination- insurmountable obstacle

Living in a world with almost 7,5 billion different people, problems are not unusual. But as human beings, the most advanced species, it is disheartening that "classes" still exist. Discrimination, originator of a such thing, is an insurmountable obstacle that lives within us.

As children, we are thought that discrimination is a bad characteristic and to never let it become a part of our soul. But as we age, a dark seed, once planted in our heart, that we are unaware of, starts to grow with us. Once it spreads its roots it is highly unlikely we will ever destroy it. It is like a parasite, love and happiness get sucked out slowly and we become bitter before we even realise anything.

As a woman, I am confronted with this problem every day. How many times you have heard or maybe even said the same sentence: She is a woman, she can't do it? Probably more than you know. For an enormous period of time, women were fighting for their rights. Being a housewife, was not a choice it was an obligation. Today, in 21. century, we should have evolved, but it is not the case. Men are intimidated by a successful women, and when they stop being a person who brings the food to the table, they become grumpy.

Discrimination against women is just a pure example. Unfortunately every person has been in similar situation at least once. It destroys confidence and motivation but it can also bring out the bitterness, anger and depression. The power you feel when you put someone down will certainly fade quickly and regret will eat you up. Battle against this particular problem continues, but somehow we are still at the beginning. Organization dedicated to this problem, should exist in every country. Children as well as adults should participate in activities which involve building trust between different people.

Once we use diversity as an advantage not as defect, world will become better place. Until we realise that, the problems will just pile up and solution will disappear.
